

Association Analysis

Since in most locations almost every possible product is priced within a single day, we were not able to find any strong correlations between product pricings using the apriori algorithm. However, we still learned a few facts about the data. One thing that stood out was that for every city in Kenya, every day, wheat flour and long grain rice were priced together in the same day. For a sample run of the apriori algorithm see results.png